

The Breast Cancer Research Council

The Breast Cancer Research Council includes breast cancer advocates, scientists, clinicians, medical specialists, representatives from industry and nonprofit health organizations, and a member of the breast cancer early detection section. Council members shape policy, set goals, and identify new priorities in breast cancer research. Their passion to prevent, treat, and cure breast cancer is driven by practical priorities: to identify the most urgent and unanswered questions about breast cancer, and to find the greatest opportunities for making an impact on the burdens caused by the disease.
